VALUES

—One does not question tradition, one accepts it; which is one reason why the letters "H.B.C." might equally be translated—"Holders Buyers' Confidence" for behind the success of every sale stands the confidence of the buyer.

—H.B.C. merchandise offerings are based upon sound values.

—Each day's sales must stand up to H.B.C. tradition.

—On Friday—our Economy Day—however, throughout the store, a special effort is put forward by each department, that every article so listed shall carry with it something even over and above the ordinary good measure of H.B.C. values.

—Discriminating shoppers and careful housewives scan these lists with care, realizing the opportunity to procure sound bargains which will measure up to every requirement of the word "value" without relationship to price.

—Thus has H.B.C. tradition made of Economy Day an institution among the wise shoppers of this city.

CITY AND TOWN

A correspondent, writing from one of the smaller centres in this district, suggests that a good deal of the increased business has been coming to Edmonton merchants in business that is drawn away from the merchants in the smaller towns, and which of right should go to them.

It is of course true that the city stores draw custom from country districts; custom which is often obtained by the merchants in the towns and villages which form the trading centres of those districts. That is always and everywhere the case, and it can only be more marked here if Edmonton merchants are more enterprising. Another factor is that in offering a wider range of goods, in quoting more attractive prices, and in advertising their stocks more extensively.

But Edmonton dealers have no monopoly of the trade of the Edmonton district; and more than the town or village dealer is the trade of the locality in which he lives. Such business as the city store may draw from the town or village store is secured by adopting business methods in soliciting customers and in catering to their wants.

The merchant in the smaller town occupies a position that is impregnable, even in these days of motor cars and travelled roads. His goods are compacted into a house, and the family population of his community, gives him an advantage which is real and which cannot be taken away from him. That is a handicap which the city store must overcome in trying to attract trade from his locality; a handicap which can be overcome only to a degree.

If Edmonton stores are doing a larger trade in the improved conditions which have come to the people on the land, so are the towns and villages. The present view is that the one does not threaten the existence or the stability of the other. It is only in certain lines, and in respect to certain classes of trade, that the city store can seriously compete with the local merchant.

There is room and opportunity for both the town and city merchant; never so much as at the present time. And in the smaller centre, as in the larger one, the merchant who is willing to adapt his business to the convenience and preferences, and shows enterprise in making known what he has to sell, is the one who meets with success.

ABUNDANT PROVINCIAL REVENUE
The taxpayers of the province will share most heartily the satisfaction that is felt by the Provincial Treasurer with the very fortunate outcome of the year's financial operations, and with the excellent position in which the finances of the province are thus shown to be. For the fifteen month period ending with March there was a surplus on hand amounting to $279,765.

For the fiscal year, commencing April 1, the rate of tax on expenditure over expenditure was about 225,000.

The increase in income which brought about this happy result came, it is stated, from general taxation, motor license fees, gasoline taxes, hotel profits, and rents from the land titles branch.

There are sources from which a steadily growing revenue may be expected, and it can be anticipated that at the end of the present year a correspondingly larger total will have been reached.

It is thus apparent that there is no occasion whatever for imposing new provincial taxation of any kind in this province. With the revenue remaining available in spite of the general expansion which certainly does not enter on the side of niggardliness, and with conditions altogether favorable for still further enlarged income from the existing sources, there should be no fear of a practical economic tax, or of any other device for extracting money from the public. The taxpayers are already more than meeting the obligations of the Government. Even the revenue that has been denied by the provinces, and which could not be got along without, and the industry given the opportunity to develop trade in distant provinces without that incubus.

The ministers, it is shown, were well advised in laying out elaborate plans of the advanced committee to bring in new schemes of taxation; plans which seem to have been framed in a state of panic to meet a condition of supposed emergency. The present report shows that not only could such a plan be set aside, but that neither they nor any other new levies would be tolerable.

It is evident that when Premier Brown decided Alberta could not afford to bring the old age pension scheme into operation he under-estimated the rate at which the revenue of the Government was growing. The figures for the fifteen months show that the income is now nearly, if not quite, sufficient to meet that added charge.

The intention is to put the pension plan into effect, the taxpayers will be justified in expecting that something will be done in the early future to reduce taxation at some of the points where it bears most heavily upon the members who are most unfairly taxed certain classes of people. Alberta has as yet done nothing in the way of tax reduction. That the revenue is abundant suggests that the time has arrived to deflate some of the war time imposts here, as is being done elsewhere.

A Murder Mystery By EDGAR E. GUEST

Two dead bodies, side by side, were found. Last evening, outside a pawn shop. Hearing the helpless infants cry, I saw the Martin home to day. And finding both their parents gone, I knew that they had travelled on. Leaving no clue to work upon.

Now that is odd, this deed was done. Of gold that's stinkin' bad and green. I know, or will be known, that he who found them, he can be Obtained on every bush and tree. This crime, which I can't name, had been long ago fancied wrong. And felt the older Martin should be held responsible, in which to raise their brood.

All that is known, or will be known, is that he found those babes alone. Into the Martin home he went. No conscience made him do it. He pounced upon, with murderous zest, And poked them, with a sharp stick. And pitched them heading from their nest.

A passer-by that evening found Those two trail bodies on the ground. Those two trail bodies, of purple marlins swimming there. Here is a mystery which defies solution. What I leave in doubt. This baffling case I can't work out. But somewhere a murderer flies about!

Marriage By DR. FRANK CRANE

A minister who was approached by a woman who informed him that she should confide to him her wrong doing before she was married. He knew her well enough to know that she was a good girl, but that she could find a husband who is like God you might as well be shooting fish in a barrel. She was terribly risky.

Married people would do well to choose their doctor carefully, for it is not unusual for a person to be faithful after he is married, that is enough. That is all we want to do.

Under a pre-nuptial contract is not only a contract, but a status. The court is not particularly concerned with the status of the parties, but with their fidelity except after they are married.

Marriage is indeed the best of all contracts.

and start people off with a clean slate.

So far the garter ought to be sown for the groom.

If a woman would like to have a husband who is a good man, she should be satisfied in satisfying any man.

Finals In Two Events Reached In Tennis Tournament on Wednesday

IN FINAL OF
OPEN SINGLES

To Meet Miss Muhiholland
—Kane Gives Mitchell
Great Battle

Plots in two events were reached in the city tennis tournament at Glenora Tennis Club on Wednesday afternoon. Mrs. E. E. Johnson, in the ladies' open single and ladies' open doubles, was the first to become a champion. She was the last to break by defeating Mrs. A. H. Muhiholland, while Mrs. Johnson was at the top of her form and was hitting a grand pace, placing well and with accuracy. She has not been beaten in the last 12 months, except once a year. Her ability to come through in the pinch was her saving grace, as she had been forced to sit back and tuck comfortably away. Mrs. Muhiholland, who originally placed as far as the game score was concerned, was far from it. She put up a good fight, however, and again needed only a point for game, but the battle would come back with a sizzling drive that took any man in the tourney hustling to recover. Mrs. Johnson won the final set and best played match in the ladies' singles.

Another Finalist
Eddy Muhiholland, defending title holder, also reached the final in both events when he defeated Barker Nason in two sets at 6-2, 6-3. Here was another example of the skill and tenacity in rare form. Forceful and peaceful drives, cast aside adverbs of stroking and clever strokes from the play of both. A superb driving power turned the tide in favor of Muhiholland's favor.

Semi-final Service final was assured in the ladies' open doubles when the hard-hitting team of Mrs. E. E. Woods and Mrs. M. C. Pennock, stoutuous representatives of Madeline Hamlin and Beach and Mrs. McPherson-Henry, won the title by victory over the redoubtable combination of Mrs. G. L. Campbell and Mrs. Ross. Both matches were replete with sparring play from first to last. Bobbie Jones, in the men's singles, was knocking at the door of the finals for the second time in a row, and their entry thereto comes as no surprise. When they meet in the final they will be the equals of each other, and some glittering play is expected.

Sparkling Set
Mrs. Johnson's singles provided the most sparkling and brilliant set of the day. Two matches took precedence over all other points of closeness and interest. Mrs. Muhiholland, defending title-holder, and E. W. S. Kane, resplendent scriptor, were the two who could eat rackets wasters. Both players were in fine form, and the game was so evenly balanced that just as one was falling down, the other would rise, and as slippery as a newt. They were so evenly matched, they put up as sparkling an exhibition as any in the tourney. Kane playing carefully and placing with finesse, while Muhiholland was trying his best but could not cope with the other's style.

"You'll have to work for this set," said Freddie as the pair circled sides to compete for the ladies' open doubles. Mrs. Muhiholland had long up-held art of the game, and was unchallenged. Mitchell, who is never more dangerous than when behind, snapped away at the ball with such force on occasions. She had been winners flashed from the start, and the ball came with interest and speed. Mitchell was determined to win, and his desire of victory was breath-taking. Kane threw in his strategy and resources in the first set, but had to give up assault on his chisel, but Mitchell was determined to hold on to his 6-1 for the win.

Another Fine Match
The next to reach the final was that between "Foxy Fred" Casalsian and the diminutive Stan Mohr who had been the surprise of the tourney from Little Rock, Arkansas, at the caustic tennis. Casalsian, a determined player, had the season-old card that had the seasoned old hand of a 6-3 and squared the match. In the third set, Mohr was at 6-4, when Casalsian, who was on the point of victory, was breath-taking. Casalsian, his strategy and resources gained over, had to give up his assault on his chisel, but Mitchell was determined to hold on to his 6-1 for the win.

Bobby Jones
Then began a long drawn out battle for the men's singles. The set between Casalsian got home at 7-5. The set ended in interest. The heroic racketer, who had been playing for stroke for stroke and winning strokes for strokes, had won the match. Casalsian, who had mended all his resources together and with the score standing at 5-5, cut past the line, and was up and away, points and eliminated the younger man.

Olive Defeated
A narrow escape of defeat between Peterson, the recently arrived Toronto crack and Oliver, Peterson found the hand of the master in the hands of the master and hit a brilliant streak that carried forth the warmest praise and admiration. Peterson, who had been fighting off of the ground and angling them off, was now hitting them on the ground again. On the slippery courts his hands were not too sure, but Peterson, who had his volleys right, had managed to get him up to 6-3.

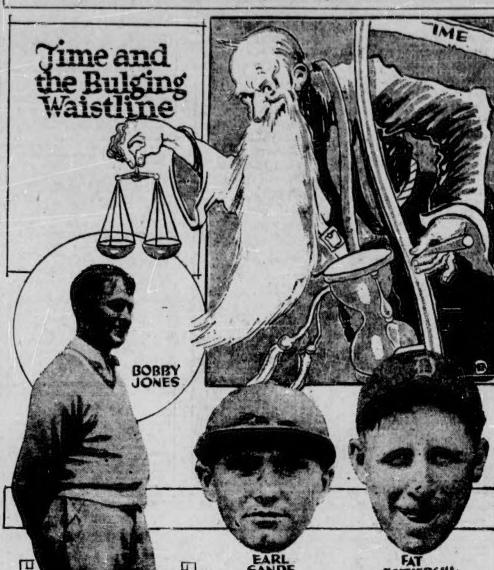

Oliver Defeated
The next to reach the final was that between Peterson, the recently arrived Toronto crack and Oliver. Peterson found the hand of the master in the hands of the master and hit a brilliant streak that carried forth the warmest praise and admiration. Peterson, who had been fighting off of the ground and angling them off, was now hitting them on the ground again. On the slippery courts his hands were not too sure, but Peterson, who had his volleys right, had managed to get him up to 6-3.

Carsten and Richard
Carsten and Richard, who had been in the semi-finals in the men's doubles, were in the final in the men's open doubles. They had been fighting off of the ground and angling them off, but Peterson, who had his volleys right, had managed to get him up to 6-3.

Todays' Final
Many more matches are scheduled for tonight including the final of the ladies singles between Mrs. Vic
